

Internet access badly needs competition to ensure access to the public. Please do not freeze out ISPs from broadband services by allowing phone companies with monopolistic access to homes and businesses to charge exorbitant access rates and to limit service. The phone companies have never fostered real innovation wide access or cheap prices. The FCC needs to see beyond the short-sighted politically motivated, special interest money and provide the Internet with the opportunity to be the driving force of the new economic order which it can be.